— A NOVEL BY —

Starr tried to smile at that, but it was a pious effort. Something caught in her throat. In the motherly way she had affected with the girl, Sapphira was running on:—
"You all look so pale an' tired, Miss Starr. Honest, you worry me. You're just like a shadow. An' no wonder, the way you go on. Parties, parties, from mornin' till night. You don't ever get no rest. You'll kill yourself, shore's your'n born!"

A wistful trace of a smile haunted Starr's lips as she murmured:

"You may be right—I'm fed up with about—everything!"

What she could not tell Sapphira—or anybody—was that she knew it was not the life she was leading which was sapping her frail strength. It was the grim grin of her destiny. Days were flying into weeks. Soon it would be weeks into months. Such a little time left.

When she was partying she could forget the terror. Only at times like this it came back to her. And at night when she lay in bed in the dark the monotonous tick-tick-tick of her bedside clock firmed itself into an ominous rhythm which chimed menacingly into her brain.

"Thou—Shalt Not—Thou—Shalt—Not—"

Starr realized how little time she had for getting dressed for the evening, but when Sapphira insisted that she must lie down if only for a few minutes, she gave in. A little too late for argument. What if she was late? Let them wait for her. Nowadays none of their parties ever appeared really to get going, anyway, until Sapphira arrived. And her recollections might as well coil their heads about a while. She had not intended to, but she must have slept. For somehow or other she was back in Egypt again, not at the tomb of terror but in that small desert town that had intrigued her. She was seeing the streets, and the place of the sand divider, living again days that had been full of joy and beauty.

There was the long, gaunt sand divider when Starr and her father and her interpreter passed his shop. He looked like the tallest man on earth standing under the yellow light of the lantern in his shop from which came glimpses of beautiful things—scarlet embroideries, copper, gold. She could smell the incense that floated out from the pierced silver brazier.

They were outside on the sands—there was a thrill of fear as her eyes saw his, as if, even before he spoke, he was telling her something against her. She fought—something in his appearance and manner suggested power and mystery, as though he could read the future with only that lag of sand he held. The interpreter said: "He is of the sand himself—they tell him secrets."

He was crouching on the ground, his tall figure hunched, covered with his white garments. His lips were moving. "He is speaking to his ancestors—the sand," the interpreter said.

Then a low murmur came from his lips before he began to talk rapidly, as though to himself, pouring his words onto the ground, his gaunt finger working it into patterns, breaking them up, making new ones.

His head was shaking, his eyes downcast. Suddenly he looked up, to speak to her in a garbled mixture of French and Arabic, most of which she could understand:

"I bring you truth in a world of lies."

The interpreter said: "He says he sees something wonderful in your soul, great joy, but before that, terrible pain." He sees the desert, men are digging, digging—there is a great desert. There is—He stopped as the rapid talk of the sand divider rose into a wail. The interpreter laughed. "I was mistaken, he says—the sea is joy—it must be joy."

"Then why is he saying it is so hard to be?" Starr asked. "He seems really to be suffering—look at the great drops of sweat on his forehead, the way he looks at me..."

"He says there is more—there must come death, great trouble, journeys across the wide sea where the people are like the sands of the desert, where their constant noise is like the howling of the jackals, before there shall come to you..."

The rest of it faded was blurred in the uneasy dream. Then Starr could hear her father's voice:

"Don't let it distress you my dear. These men are all alarmists. It's their business. I can tell you better of the future. Love my dear, is the only real driver. You will know when the time comes for you to know it. You must give love, too, to know its true greatness. You cannot take love, nor wrest it. Nothing that we take is ever of great account to us, only what we are given freely."

The monotonous chant of the interpreter's voice was drowning:—
"The dates arrived on the palm trees. The flowers drop and die in the sand—all is dark and silent—"

Starr sat up on the cushioned chaise longue with a sharp cry. There was a quick wonder in her eyes at the recognition of the familiar scene of her bedroom. She had been dreaming, of course. As always—of Egypt. It came back to her in some phase continuously. Why must it always be so? And such vivid dreams!

Sapphira was concernedly watching her. "You-couldn't sleep long, Miss Starr, but it reckons better than nothin'..." You still mighty pale and tired, though."

Starr sprang to her feet, rushed over to her dressing table. She cried suddenly:—
"But I mustn't look tired and pale—I mustn't! Wait till I get busy with this rouge and lipstick, Sapphira. I shall be surprised!"

Defiantly her fingers worked, transforming the soul-less Starr Ellison into the vivacious "Play-Girl." Even that vivid dream was fading from her mind, save for a haunting memory, as though she could really hear her father's voice: "Love is the only diviner." Love—that she was never to know!

In a moment her lips were smiling, mocking once more.

A lot of vivid color painted on glass. That's what I am, Sapphira. Some day a puff of wind will break the glass, then there'll be no more Starr."

The colored woman stared with bewildered eyes.

"Lucky makes, Miss Starr, how funny you do talk!"

CHAPTER X.

"Play-Girl" arrived at Tod Rang's party at the Mayfair with Lance Marlowe, Jimmy Field, and Kerry Norris. Lance's bonny companion and fussy Achates. It amused her to appear with three escorts when most girls had trouble enough finding one and holding onto him.

She wore an unrelaxed face, a frock that was as far from being any slinky Egyptian-like garment as it would be to imagine. There was more of a hint of a belle of the old South. It was a demure dress with tiny ruffled sleeves and flounced skirt. The effect against her dark beauty was devastating.

The other women of the set into which Starr had been catapulted were used to her bizarre outfits. Some of them tried to imitate her, with questionable success. Now that she had gone to the other extreme, everyone else felt uncomfortably overdone. Or rather underdone. Some of "Play-Girl's" costumes had been like that.

It gave Starr a very poised, sure-of-herself feeling.

The party was the usual thing. Because Starr had been a bit late, it was under way, and everyone was already there. Starr was at the right, as she always was at Tod's parties. Tod, himself, was going strong, and showed it pretty plainly. He dropped his own partner like she was something that disagreed with him and swayed over to insist on his rights at the game of the party, to dancing at once with "Play-Girl." Of course Starr did, but she was not too intrigued either by his rough-house play nor by his conversation. Tod, it appeared, in common with too many other men, had propositions to make to "Play-Girl." He did not intend to put them off any longer. He was inclined to be lachrymose when she laughed at him.

"'Course I've never had any of those wonderful experiences you've had, but I could make the grade," he insisted, as he wobbled her down the ballroom floor.

"You must have had plenty of experiences of your own, Tod," Starr laughed. "You're holding out on me."

He held her off and eyed her solemnly. "Sure I have, kitem—plenty. Haven't you heard? Maybe nobody ever told you about that stretch I did for choking a pawnbroker and hiding him in the cellar under his own gold, or the time I drowned all the little children at the Sunday School picnic and raped the preacher's wife..." How about it, honey—going to be good to Tod? I've been waiting plenty long."

Starr said gently, as she disengaged herself from the too-cloze clasp of his arm:

"Let's talk about it later. You're a little tight, Tod. Mind if I don't dance with you until later?"

Starr walked calmly away, leaving her host standing, waving a bit, but staring after her in confusion. With that same sure-of-herself feeling, she sauntered directly over to Michael Fairbourne, leaning against a wall, and said:

"I forgive you for being such a bear this afternoon, Michael-Hansen, but rather than do this dance with you, if you're not afraid of me."

Out of the corner of her eye she saw Stephanie Dale. Stephanie had agreed to come to this party. It was not being given in honor of "Play-Girl."

Stephanie's eyes blazed with jealousy. Starr smiled softly. That was part of her new role that she enjoyed. She loved making other girls jealous, especially Stephanie.

She had a long way to go before she was even with the haughty Steph-

They that seek the Lord shall not want any good thing. Psalm 34:10.

God, who the universe doth hold, In my shepherd kind and faithful, In my shepherd and doth keep me Still supplied with all things needful.

What a wonderful thing it is to have the Lord for our shepherd. The Almighty Creator of all things who holds the universe in His hands, as though it were a very little thing, has charged Himself with the care and keeping of you just as a shepherd is charged with the care and keeping of his sheep. If our hearts could only take in this thought we would never have a fear or care again, for with such a shepherd how could we ever want any good thing?

The Ladies' Aid of Champion United church will meet at the home of Mrs. Latiff on Thursday afternoon, November 26th, at 3 o'clock.

Ladies' Aid Bazaar

Remember the opportunity for Christmas shopping at the Ladies' Aid Bazaar, in the basement of the Community hall, Saturday, December 5th. Mrs. Ulrich has charge of the bazaar this year, and what she does, as we all know, is well done. The ladies have tried to specialize in small inexpensive articles, suitable for gifts.

It is worth a trip to the bazaar just to see the display of aprons, large and small, plain and fancy. But for the best selection in these it is advisable to shop early in the afternoon, as they are soon picked up. Mrs. Latiff and Mrs. Caldwell will have charge of the sale of aprons.

The home produce booth is under the direction of Mrs. O. and Mrs. Collins. Contributions of home cooking, home-canned fruits or meats, chickens, vegetables, butter, eggs—anything along the lines indicated, will be greatly received. And if you can find time to make a plate or so of candy, just remember how the kiddies always look forward to the Ladies' Aid candy table.

Tea will be served during the afternoon. Meet your friends at the bazaar, and enjoy with them delicious sandwiches and cake, with the ever refreshing cup of tea.

"Have you ever heard of a 'Parcel Post Sale'?" I'll try to explain it. If to me you will mail

8 me article which for twenty-five cents will sell. Your Champion friends will place every well."

This little verse, with the something or giving the date of the sale, has been sent out to numerous friends of the Ladies of Mrs. Dawson's group of the Aid. As a result we feel sure the post office could report an increase in packages of all shapes and sizes arriving in Champion during the past month. It has been very hard to refrain from opening these, but the ladies have been heroic and have stored them away pending the date of the Ladies' Aid Bazaar, Saturday, December 5th. The parcels will then be sold just as they arrived in the mail, for 25¢ each.

They have come from far and near; some are large and bulky, some diminutive. Some, we know, contain a good deal more in value than their price indicates. One is a donation from Marie Le Cerf, of "Chateleine" Handicraft, Toronto.

Do try your luck at the "Parcel Post Sale." If you should be disappointed in your purchase, there will always be the chance of exchanging with someone else.
